Area Overview

Union City functions as a dense, transit-oriented urban municipality within the New York metropolitan region, situated atop the Hudson River Palisades in northern Hudson County. The city continues to experience strong and consistent housing demand driven by its immediate proximity to Manhattan, extensive bus and light rail connectivity, and well-established mixed-use corridors. Characterized by a predominantly multifamily housing stock and walkable neighborhoods, Union City offers a comparatively affordable alternative to New York City while maintaining direct regional access. Ongoing reinvestment along major corridors such as Bergenline Avenue, Kennedy Boulevard, and Palisade Avenue reinforces the city's appeal to both residents and investors.

Economically, Union City supports a diverse, locally focused employment base anchored by retail, food service, healthcare, education, and small professional services. Bergenline Avenue serves as the city's primary commercial spine, hosting dense neighborhood retail, restaurants, service-oriented businesses, and residential units above ground-floor uses. Additional employment support is provided by nearby healthcare facilities, public institutions, and access to larger employment hubs throughout Hudson County and Manhattan. This balanced mix of local commerce and regional accessibility contributes to Union City's overall economic resilience and long-term stability.
